Wongawilli

Traditional Australian Folk Music at its best

The Wongawilli Band was originally formed in 1987 to help promote, preserve and perform Australia's rich tradition of music, song and dance. In the past 3 years the band has performed in China (3 times), Denmark, Sweden, Finland and Germany.

The band has become well known throughout Australia with performances at all major folk festivals in all Australian States and the Northern Territories including the major folk events at Woodford, Qld, Port Fairy, Vic, Victor Harbour (SA) and the National Folk Festival (16 times).

The band has aimed at trying to be different from the average bush band by performing unfamiliar yet entertaining music. This formula has received national recognition with 16 awards at the Australian Bush Music Festival and Bush Band Championships.

In particular the band's singer, Graeme Murray, received the 1991 Australian Bush Music Awards Best Male Vocalist ahead of John Williamson and Alan Scott. He repeated the award in 1993 and 1994 and has become the "Voice of the Bush".

Also the band's accordionist, David De Santi, received the 1992 Australian Bush Music Heritage Award, a Commonwealth Government Centenary Medal in 2003 for services to the folk music industry in Australia, is the editor of Australia's national folk music magazine Trad&Now and Illawarra Folk Festival Director.

Jane Brownlee, the band's violinist and David De Santi were recently awarded the National Library of Australia Folk Festival Fellowship which involved further researching of Australia's song and music tradition.

The group includes 10 year Samuel De Santi, a wizard on the Irish bodhran since the age of 5! He can claim some special tuition from Gino Lupari from Four Men and a Dog for his skill.

Jamie McKew OAM, Festival Director for Port Fairy Folk Festival

Wongawilli is the pre-eminent group performing Australian folk music in this country. The music they play is uniquely Australian, but without any of the clichés usually associated with Australian folk music. In the fifteen years they have been performing, they have built an unequalled reputation for fine musicianship and entertainment, backed up by extensive research into the traditional origins of the music and the people who played it in the past.

Graham McDonald, Program Director for National Folk Festival, Canberra

Wongawilli's background as performers, folk advocates, and folk historians that is unlike any other group performing in Australia today. The band has a national profile, gained through performances at all major folk festivals in all Australian States and the Northern Territories including the major folk events at the Woodford Folk Festival, Queensland, the Port Fairy Folk Festival, Victoria, Victor Harbour Folk Festival, South Australia and the National Folk Festival (now held permanently in Canberra) thirteen times, an outstanding record that rivals any other folk/traditional act for experience, longevity and popularity.

Wongawilli band members have earned a range of accolades; the band's singer Graeme Murray, received the 1991 Australian Bush Music Awards Best Male Vocalist ahead of John Williamson, a feat he repeated in 1993 and 1994, accordionist David De Santi, received the 1992 Australian Bush Music Heritage Award for his exemplary work in promoting and preserving Australian dance and music with the Pioneer Performers Series, a compilation of books and cassettes. David was also awarded a Commonwealth Government Centenary Medal in 2003 for services to the folk music industry in Australia.

Wongawilli is a rare band filled with musicians who are not only entertaining, but are authorities on Australian traditional music, an enviable combination.

Dani Rocca, President of Folk Alliance Australia, 2004
